PART III.

CHAPTER II.

MOTHER AND SON MEET IN LONDON.

At the same hour, in a London house, two ladies, dressed in mourning and carefully veiled, sat in a room of a certain feeling of uneasiness

about the quays of the Thames where they were engaged in unloading the steamers along the wharves.

The room was a black room, the walls of which were covered with black and white photographs of the London Docks. From the top of the black room, the Tower, black and mysterious, and the entrance of the London Docks was visible, with its piles of merchandise.

supreme favour of fate had placed near me an excellent priest, the chaplain of the penitentiary, who interested himself in my unhappy lot, on seeing me so different from my companions in trouble. He made it his task to reform me. From being savage and untractable, he made me calm and resigned. He kindled in my soul the belief of my innocent childhood, showed me that Heaven was a supreme refuge, and that in prayer was to be found a lasting consolation. For long, long days occupied solely by rough and tedious work, during interminable nights of burning fever, I had not had the thought of God to calm and soothe my spirit. I should either have killed myself or gone mad. On arriving I had determined on suicide. I had just spent six days shut up in a cage with the scum of the human race, hearing nothing but infamous expressions, obscene songs, and projects of vengeance; all this beneath the mouth of a cannon loaded with grape. Life seemed to me impossible, and I had made up my mind to escape from it by death.

"Unhappy child!" groaned Madame de Fréneuse, laying her trembling hands on her son's head. "A suicide!"

"Oh! no, mother, it was all in vain. From the very first day my companions conceived a hatred against me. They looked upon me as a bourgeois, an aristocrat. For even among this abject and depraved society there is a hierarchy, and it is the basest and most infamous who are the most respected. Seeing me so different from them, they were convinced that I was a spy, a black-stemmer. They said in their slang, and one day when the attendant had for a few moments left the shed where we were toiling in the full glare of the tropical sun, five of them threw themselves upon me. Their plan was simple enough. We were dragging a heavy cast-iron cylinder over the road, to smooth down the stones with it. It had just been paved. Their crime was to be a simple accident. It was to be supposed that I had slipped, the roller, drawn along by the rest, could not be brought to a stand-still all of a sudden, and I was to be crushed to death beneath it."

"Yes, mother. That was what I thought when I saw myself seized and flung to the ground, and heard them encourage one another with frightful cries. The roller had happened to be beneath this heavy cylinder. I had only to let them alone, my prayers would have been heard, and I should have been rid of my hateful life. But a feeling of revolt against the atrocious act of these men, an instinct of preservation came over me in a moment, and instead of submitting to murder, I had the strength to defend myself. I was still vigorous in spite of the privations I had endured, and in a trice I had felled two of my assailants. The rest, astonished at my resistance, again flung themselves on me. I struck down another of them with a blow of my chain. On hearing the scuffle, the attendant came running back. A single glance told him what had happened. He placed his hand to his revolver, and soon everything was restored to a state of order. The director was informed of the matter, and the following day I was removed from the frightful surroundings in which I was living and placed in the office of the penitentiary. There, though I had no greater liberty, I had at least the right to suffer alone without being a laughing-stock, and to pray without being insulted. It was then that my ideas gradually changed, and that in the silence of my cloistered life, I became another man. All I had passionately loved and sought after: pleasure, luxury, human vanity now seemed to me utterly worthless. What I had thought had been to speed the flying hours in pleasure, now seriously began to think and reflect. All the pernicious utility of my past existence was now made evident to me. There were other things to do in this world, besides engaging in a life of dissipation. Other things to do for lack of food, and passed their lives in toiling for a paltry payment, and their workshops, sheds, and mines, were also bagnes. These, however, had not deserved such an unhappy lot. Even a small proportion of the money I formerly squandered away so foolishly would have rendered me useful to the world. I should have been able to lighten their burden of toil and give them some measure of happiness. I determined, if ever I left my prison, to devote my remaining life to the poor and lowly in memory of what I had suffered myself. I imparted my thoughts to a most devoted priest who had voluntarily come to live in the prison, and he gave me the hope of converting and saving them. He encouraged me, became my friend, and after a time was convinced that I was innocent. It was a great relief, my dear mother, to hear these words falling for the first time from a human mouth. I believe that you are not guilty. It was the representative of the world who had put the lie to my own eyes. I was overcome with gratitude. And I made a vow to devote myself to the service of this God in whose name the work of pity and love was being effected."

"To become a priest, yes, mother. It will be an act of wisdom as well as an act of repentance. Do not mis- understand me. In this world, even though I succeed in bringing about the triumph of truth, and in proving my innocence, I shall none the less be branded with infamy. A stain like the one inflicted on me can never be completely washed away. In spite of everything, my friends will treat me coldly, will look at me with a scornful word. The blessing will remain just the same. I shall have to suffer from continually seeing that I am only welcomed under tolerance, and that any sympathy shown me will be forced. Accordingly, it will be more dignified on my part to withdraw from a society the doors of which are only opened to me through charity. My pride would have been counselled for me such a refuge, even though my convictions had not forced me to this conclusion. I will stay near you to make you forget the grief I have caused you; and my life will be spent in paying my debt of tenderness. You will recover your son once again, and some time, comparing what I shall be with what I was in the past, you may not be brought to think that Providence seemed bent on ruining me the better to save me."

"Oh! no! my dear child. However sweet your promises I shall never be able to recall without shuddering at the terrible nightmare of the last two years. Look how my face is wrinkled, how grey my hair is become, and see how my hands tremble. In twenty-four months I have aged a score of years. Now I look like a septuagenarian. Have I too, also committed great sins that I have been so heavily punished? For the chastisement you accept has been extended to your sister and your mother, and that was not right!"

Jacques' features contracted, and he looked up with sorrowful eyes.

"Yes, and it is that very fact which will make me implacable against those whose hate has followed me. I mean the fact that the people have suffered along with the guilty. I am wandering, just now, mother, when speaking of pity and charity. The time has not yet come for me to be helpful and indulgent. I have to condemn and to punish first."

"Are you certain to succeed in this?"

"Those who are guilty cannot escape me, they are in my power. My appearance alone is sufficient to confound them. Their security is in their certainty that I shall never return. Still, though acquainted with their crimes, I am ignorant as to the reasons they have for committing them, and it is in these reasons especially that my justice will lie. I must prove, mother, that I am not only a man, but a man condemned, but also who committed the murder and for what reason. This is the work to which I will devote my final energies as a man. Afterwards I will be all indulgence and gentleness."

"Then that wretched woman," said Madame de Fréneuse, for whom you had committed so many follies, and whom you are accused of having killed, is living?"

"Yes, she is here in London. Last night, she was singing at Covent Garden. In company with our friends, I was present at the performance. Seated in an obscure box, painted like a actor so that no one could recognize him, I had the opportunity of seeing Madame de Fréneuse and her daughter took leave of Jacques. On alighting from the yacht they passed a man of distinguished mien, whom I was easy to recognize as a Frenchman by his general appearance. He stopped to allow them to pass, bowed, and stepped on to the foot-bridge. Doubtless it was the man who had been walking to and fro on the dock, came eagerly to meet him, and after a vigorous handshake, said: "Come this way, my dear lawyer."

"Hush!" said the visitor with a smile. "No name or title, please, my dear friend."

And following his guide he descended. It was Pierre de Vein. Doubtless it was not the first time he had been on board the Magie, for he followed without a mistake the pathway which led along the water-tight partitions to the stern. There, in a small smoking-room next to the dining-room, he found Tragoner and Jacques. After shaking hands he sat down and said:

"I have just met your mother and sister. They appeared delighted, poor souls! It was, indeed, time the prospect began to look brighter for them. But things are progressing satisfactorily, and I have brought you good news. The man who was with Jenny Hawkins has arrived. He has been brought into relations with Mr. Melville, the head of the English detective service, a man of great abilities, who will assume the direction of operations. The result of the appeal for a summons against Jenny Hawkins will be very satisfactory. I am looking upon the singer as an American. It is extremely difficult to arrest her in England for a crime committed in France—for which, too, a verdict has already been pronounced. If we call her by her real name, Léa Pérelli, she becomes Italian, and that brings about fresh complications. It would be simpler enough, a mere summons to appear would be sufficient. Here, in England, it becomes very inconvenient. There is no country in the world in which liberty has more security. It amounts to licence. This is the land of promise for villains of all kinds."

"Well! What will your special agent do?" asked Tragoner.

"Keep a strict watch on Sorige and the singer, and be in readiness to intervene, if necessary. In any case, furnish us with minute particulars as to what our opponents will do. I myself, am on a holiday, and am in this matter acting only as a private citizen. I have left my title and functions behind in Paris. The Keeper of the Seal, whom I called on with the Attorney-general, is extremely interested in the issue of this affair. He is a red-hot Liberal, who would look upon the fact that a woman should be in the ministry as a personal glory. We have long been too much annoyed with compromising revisions, so that now we shall be only too delighted to try a successful one. The whole world would thus be made to see that we are inspired by a pure, disinterested love of truth and justice, that is, in short, by the noblest of motives. He and he at once arranged with the detective service that everything should be conducted quickly and silently."

"But what did the Minister say of what took place at Nomena?" asked Marneval, rubbing his hands together.

"My dear friend, that is called a 'case in reserve.' It has not been put in question. The report on the escape has reached Paris. But it is impossible to raise up anything against you there. The precautions taken by Tragoner to disguise his identity have deceived the administration. According to the governor, it is an English vessel which effected the escape, and afterwards steamed straight for Australia. If you refrain from idle boasts about the abduction, you will be free from all responsibility. Once the proofs of Monsieur de Fréneuse's innocence are in our hands, all he will have to do will be to give himself up as a prisoner, and allow matters to take their regular course. But we must have more definite proofs. The main point, everything depends on the production of such. If you do not obtain the confession of the real culprit, Monsieur de Fréneuse's position becomes very serious, and he will have to make for South America if he wishes to live free from any possible prosecution. If you refrain from idle boasts about the abduction, you will be free from all responsibility. Once the proofs of Monsieur de Fréneuse's innocence are in our hands, all he will have to do will be to give himself up as a prisoner, and allow matters to take their regular course. But we must have more definite proofs. The main point, everything depends on the production of such. If you do not obtain the confession of the real culprit, Monsieur de Fréneuse's position becomes very serious, and he will have to make for South America if he wishes to live free from any possible prosecution. RUPTURE CURED
FOR TWO GUINEAS

THIS entire newspaper could be filled with hundreds of the most remarkable of Testimonials from people all about you who have been entirely CURED of the most painful and dangerous form of Rupture, at an actual cost to themselves most cases of LESS THAN TWO GUINEAS. We publish no LIES, VERIFICATION (without dissent) from people supposed to live thousands of miles away from you. Neither do we publish misreading of verifications pretending to cure "Rupture." Therefore, in order to obtain your name and address, we have no worthless Silver or Watches to rob us, but we DO have the only tried and true ANEURISM CURE for RUPTURE ever discovered, the only Successful REPAIRER now in use, and we give you PROOF, Name Proof of the strongest kind to substantiate our statements. The following are simply a FEW recent cases:

RUPTURE CURED IN 14 MONTHS.
(31 Days of Age).
Brend Marten, Stourhead-on-Avon.
September 1st, 1900.

Dr. Pierce,

Dear Sir,—It is now about 18 months since I came to London to try an Electric Trust for my husband, and I think it only fair to let you know that after wearing it for 14 months he is completely CURED. He does not want it, and although 62 years old, there is not very sign that the cure is complete, so he has not given us a true test the last two months. If you care to make use of this letter you are very welcome to do so, and might prove the means of relieving someone of from suffering—Yours sincerely,

L. V. LEADHENTON.
P.S.—My husband's name is Thomas L., and it is well known here for his truthfulness.

CUTTAGE ENTIRELY CURED. TRUSS REMOVED.
Charlevoix, January 8th, 1891.

Dr. Pierce,

Dear Sir,—It is with much pleasure that I write these few lines to thank you for what you Truss has done for me. I was at about eighteen months, and only took it when I failed myself until one day it became unbearable when I was work last July, and I have never worn it since and I never feel anything of the rupture. I can recommend your trusses to anyone I know that is troubled with this complaint. I've occasionally got the idea better you like if I will do so on any good—I remain, yours truly,
R. WYLLIE.
Crest Bank, Charlevoix, Derby (formerly New of Woodworth, Nottingham).

HE CONTINUES THE ABOVE CURE.
Mr. HARRY BULL, No. 7, Bridge Street, Nairn

Scotland, writes us as follows:—"I might mention that my brother, Ernest Bell, when living at Woodhouse Manor, near Nottingham, purchased one of your trusses. He was ruptured very on one side, and I am pleased to tell you that he has been able to leave the truss off for the first year now, and does not feel anything of the rupture as it is a CERTAIN PROOF THAT HE IS CURED. You may publish this if you wish to—I am, yours, &c., "HARRY BULL."

REPTURED 16 YEARS, AND THANKS GOD HE IS CURED.

Magneto Elastic Truss Co.,
10, Chancery, London, E.C.4.

Dear Sir,—I thank God that I owe to your RUTTERS I CURED after 16 years standing by your Truss, which I can and do recommend. I do assure I know it suffering from rupture. I do not know how to thank you enough for the good it has done me. I have had the truss about 16 months. I am now a healthy, contented, well man. I am, Sir, ever, your obedient servant, Wm. A. I am very thankful at having seen your advertisement. You can publish this if you like—I remain, yours very gratefully,

CURED, BUT STILL CLINGS TO THE TRUTH.
 Mr. Mendenhall, Guilford,
 September 16th, 1900
 We Dr. Fries and Son.
 Sir,—I think it is my duty to send you this formation. I have been moving about a good while I had the Truth and was by you, and I not been able to send this letter before. Am pleased to say you are the BEST TRUTH SY-NAGOGUE. I have worn it for about 18 months, I could have let it off AND THE SUPPER WOULD NOT COME DOWN, but the Truth is so comfortable that I think it wise to wear it, so it is in fit in lifting weight. I shall recommend it to some I hear of you is captured, and it is to be that you will wear all benefits that is possible, and that God will prosper you in your good work
 With my best wishes, to do you all the good I I remain, yours truly, THOMAS MORTON (to Mr. W. Mendenhall).
